FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

There's nothing true but Heaven.

I often muse in sorrow's blighting shade,
And dwell on scenes long past, when pleasure's wile,
Like trembling twilight, oft a ray displayed,
Which as it shone, would sink the blissful while.

Oft in fond fancy's retrospect I culled
Those flowrets which in childhood bloom'd so gay:
And when from each the pointed thorn I pulled,
They seemed alone, and withered all away.

I lose the magic charm of beauty's spell,
And in its smiles behelt of cares I seem:
But while with rapture on its form I dwell,
It fades deceptive—like a golden dream.

I often feel the hand of friendship press,
And see the smile which friends so oft impart;
But 'tis a specious garb—a false caress,
Such friends deceive—would wrong me from the heart.

O, what is life?—the pomp of worldly show,
Whose dark deceit the stoutest hearts has riven?
The soul that prides its bosom on joy's bow
Will find, in death—" there's nothing true but Heaven"

THE PARTING.

The ocean swells before me,
In boundless hills we roar,
The winds are spreading o'er me,
The wind is from the shore;
Oh—gallant streamers flying
Bear to a distant land,
Were soon an exile sighing,
I'll press a foreign strand.

But ere I go, sincerely
My heart shall pledge thee true,
And often after dearly
My cup shall foam to you;
Love's lie shall be forsaken,
Shall thy remembrance dear,
Each blessing thought awaken,
And bless me with a tear!

Be thou as happy ever
As I was once with thee,
You'll by misfortune never,
From sorrow ever flee:
May thoughts of sweetest pleasure
Thy happy hours employ,
And feeling' noblest treasure
Be own'd but to enjoy.

And now I've breath'd a blessing
Upon thy lavour'd head,
My ardent love confessing
O let it oft be said,
That he who sighs in sorrow,
And breathes thy much lov'd name,
If life should smile to-morrow,
May find thee still the same.

That fardest hope I'll cherish,
To cheer my lonely heart—
May recollection perish,
And life itself depart,
Ere I on thee mistaken
Should feel thee once untrue,
O never let heart forsaken,
Would have to chuck of you! D.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

"If good we plant in life will fill its place,
Ask what yields the richest soil defice."

God in the extension of his divine regard has furnished us all with the knowledge of his will, so far as relates to our own duties. He has planted good in our minds; and it is our duty to cultivate and cherish this seed. If we do what we can, he will give us assistance, so that we may grow from one degree of grace to another, and from one degree of love experience to another. Attention to the manifestations of the will of God, is all we have to do in a religious sense. He plants the grove. But if we are not devoted to his requirings—if the illuminations of his divine light, are neglected or disregarded, then vice will occupy our minds and the soil that was abundantly watered, will produce only weeds that are of little or no use to man or beast.—Weeds obstruct the growth of useful vegetation, and if suffered to obtain the preponderance, almost totally overgrows whatever is valuable. Cultivate in thy mind the seeds of those virtues which exalt and dignify humanity. Su press at their first appearance those noxious germs, that introduce disorder, and all the evils of which man complains, since his expulsion from Eden. So like Nation shall thou rejoice in Paradise regained, thou shalt partake of temporal enjoyment in peace, and thy prospects of futurity shall be those of joy and happiness to thy soul. LUCAS.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

"How fearfully and wonderfully are we made."

The curious structure of the human frame, the nice adjustment of all its various parts—the harmony of its operations and movements in a health ful state, must strike the mind of the reflecting observer with astonishment and admiration.—How wonderful must be the organization of the eye and of the ear—the one for the pleasurable sense of hearing, and the other for the delectable sense of seeing—and how great must be the privation of their faculties considering how much of our happiness is derived through these mediums.—The person who is born blind can have no idea of calumny, and he who is born deaf can conceive no adequate idea of sounds.—The blind, however, is not subject to the same deficiency of intellectual pleasure with the deaf—the avenues of knowledge being open by the oral interchange of sentiments with others, from which the deaf is excluded—with the latter, converse is in a measure destroyed—he can exercise none of the powers of speech, and the acquirement of knowledge, by signs only, is slow of very limited extent.—Saunderson was blind, yet he acquired such proficiency in science, that he was elected to a professorship in the University of Cambridge.—Moyce and Goss, were both blind, and both have been elevated as learned men.—The possession of both these senses unimpaired is a ver. great blessing, and could I exercise my choice in the privation of either of them, I should prefer losing the sense of hearing, as being the least evil of the two. And, although I might at times suffer a depression of spirits, from the sight of that activity and gaiety in others which I could not participate, yet this would be but a momentary inconvenience—for when retired within myself—absorbed in reflection, all the senses I should want, I should find myself in the possession of—But he who is doomed to loose his sight, is shut out from the light of nature, and he may be said to be imprisoned in the dark—confined within the tomb of his body—deprived of that extensive range he formerly enjoyed—his soul is fettered and chained, no longer able to wing its flight, to soar with Plato to the "Empyreal Sphere," or, with Pope, to "look through Nature up to Nature's God"—he becomes, in a great measure, indebted to others for their guidance of his own motions, and with Sampson in Agonistus, he exclaims:

" why was the sight
To such a tender ball as the eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
Why not, like feeling thro' all parts d flus'd,
That it might lack at will thro' ev'ry pore;
Then it had not been thus exil'd from light,
Doom'd to a ide half dead—a living death—
And buried—but oh! yet more miserable,
Myself my sepulchre—a moving grave."—MILTON.

ST. SEPULCHRE.

" Until the lamp which glows dimly on the tomb of St Sepulchre be extinguished, the death-star of the Lorentines shall bear the ascendant."

On the banks of the Arno, in lordly splendour, lived the Duke De Lorentine, a nobleman of the highest rank in Italy, celebrated not only as the favourite of his prince, but as a man whose energy of mind and promptitude of action were well calculated to retrieve the ruinous affairs of his native land. The neighbouring potentates had long known the imbecile state of the Italians, and invading them on every quarter, were gradually estranging from their power and territory, when De Lorentine was summoned to the Council of his Prince.—By his judicious cares in the cabinet, and his strenuous exertions in the field, the invaders of his country were repelled, and peace and prosperity again revisited the fertile plains of Italia. Yet while the thanks of his Prince and the gratitude of the people were showered upon him, while the noble greeted him with honour and the poor beheld him with adoration, the dark worm of sorrow revelled high in the bosom of D. Lorentine, jaundicing every enjoyment.

In the chapel of St. Sepulchre, near the villa Lorentine, on the tomb of the Saint to whose honour the edifice was erected, burnt a small lamp, in the halo of whose light, the following words were distinctly visible

" Until the lamp which glows dimly on the tomb of St Sepulchre be extinguished, the death-star of the Lorentine's shall bear the ascendant."

Many and repeated exertions were made to extinguish it, and so sweep the fated judgment from the Lorentine family, but in vain. If water was thrown upon it, the flame blazed more fiercely, and every attempt to smother it proved equally unavailing.

Of six children, with whom it had pleased Providence to bless the Duke De Lorentine, five had been swept off in early youth, while the youngest and only survivor, the Lord Otho, was rapidly following them to a premature grave.

With but a faint hope of success, the agonized parent caused masses for the recovery of his only child, to be solemnized in every church; on bended knees he supplicated the assistance of every Saint believed efficient by the Catholic devotee; the sacred penitential hymn to the Virgin swelled forth from every aisle of the convent, and the monastery, deprecating the judgment of heaven; while the bare footed Carmelite and the proud Benedictine performed their pilgrimages to the shrine of our Lady of Loretta—But in vain. Otho daily and hourly approached nearer the confines of mortality—he beheld the grave opening before him, yet he felt no pain, it was a general decay of humanity

At this period Italy was visited by a storm, the violence and duration of which was tremendous, even in that land where they so frequently occur. The trees which had stood for ages were torn up by the roots and carried on the wind in every direction, the orange groves and the forests were in an instant stript of their foliage by the rushing blast, the rain fell in torrents, and the winds roared with a fury which struck terror to the heart of every living thing—Although it was noon-day when the storm commenced, yet the arch of heaven became suddenly as dark as midnight, save when the excessively vivid lightning played across the horizon, disclosing the desolation of the world—The dome of St Sepulchre was rent asunder by the fearful power of the tempest, and the deluging rain pour'd unmediately on the tomb, but still the lamp flickered with unsteady brightness—The howling wind rushed up the numerous aisles of the church, but still the fire burning upon the tomb was unextinguished.

The storm died away in the distance, and the sun resumed his station in the heavens. The fearful wind was displaced by the gentle zephyr, which stole gently up the aisle of St. Sepulchre; approaching the fatal place, it played for a moment upon it, and the light suddenly vanished.—From that moment Otho was restored to health.

THE BRIEF REMARKER.

There is perhaps nothing in existence, which affords more gratification to the mind than the prosperity of our country. It enkindles every spark of national feeling, and enables us to view, in all the pride of patriotic enthusiasm, the distinguished station she holds in the grade of nations.—The many advantages she is daily acquiring over her contemporaries, will increase in progress of time, until it will gain for her an ascendancy above all others. Whilst we are taking rapid strides towards the goal of eminence, it is pleasing to reflect on the pacific measures which mark our course, not exposing our fellow citizens to the horrors attendant upon the acquisition of glory, which is more eagerly sought after by monarchial governments, we tread in the calm and composed path of domestic quietude, while followed by industry and perseverance; and while all our efforts are directed towards the great end, that of securing to ourselves the blessings of Liberty—Were we to remain idle, and wait for their spontaneous effluence we would then have good reasons for despising that form of government, the chief stay of which is the unanimous efforts of all.

When the arts are becoming more encouraged, and when a stimulus is given to the labouring part of the community, our importance is daily increasing. It is, however, needless to be reproached with our national vauntings, by a country whose characteristic is the very fault with which she accuses us. I acknowledge we are proud of our growing prosperity, and I would put the question to the most enlightened statesman that ever lived, and ask him, " ought not a nation, but forty-six years emancipated from the shackles of England, feel herself proud in the enjoyment of all the blessings that civilization can bestow?" The jealousy that is developed in the works of the foreign writers on this country, leaves no room to doubt of their views By misrepresenting the situation of the American people, they hope to give their countrymen a disgust for emigration; thereby, as they suppose, depriving us of a source of wealth But these efforts must prove abortive. There is too much enlightened sense in the world at large, and mankind are too much in the practice of thinking for themselves, to believe every tale and rumour that are circulated through envy or prejudice—It is, nevertheless, our duty to be extremely cautious as to the course we should pursue All our efforts should be, to keep alive those principles that inspired the founders of this infant nation, and our duty should prompt us to inculcate them upon the rising generation. All our endeavours should be directed towards one object—that of preserving the permanency of our national institutions.

THE ITINERANT—No. II.

" From grave to gay, from lively to severe."

HUMILITY.—Among all other virtues, humility, though the lowest, yet is it pre-eminent. It is the safest, because it is always at anchor; and that man may be truely said to live with most content in his calling, that strives to live within the compass of it.

PLEASURE.—True pleasure is only to be found in what charms the heart as well as the senses, and leaves behind it no regret.

PRIVATE CHARITY.—A man was accused of being niggardly and never bestowing any thing in charity. He found undertook to justify his character by saying, that his alms deeds were done in private, not Pharisaically; and concluded as follows: "what he gives, he gives; and that is nothing to any body"

ERRONEOUS TRANSLATIONS.—When we see "Cicero's Familiar Letters," who would suppose that they meant Cicero's letters to his friends, or who, on reading Marmontel's "Moral Tales," would not suppose that the French author had signalized himself, like Seneca or Johnson, by his moral discourses, instead of tales descriptive of Manners, which is the real meaning of Contes Moraux.

SPURIOUS PRIDE.—There is a healthful hardiness about real dignity, that never dreads contract and communion with others, however humble—It is only spurious pride that is morbid and sensitive, and shrinks on every touch. Sketch Book.

RUDENESS OF MANNERS.—Says a French writer, is not a single c—, but the product of several—Vanity, ignorance of the world, contempt of others, or envy and jealousy of them. Sometimes inborder and want of feeling may produce solitary instances of it. When it becomes a habit, beating or hanging is the only remedy.

Epigram on a beautiful lady who often made use of the word " DEVIL."

See round her form the ready devil flies,
Hangs on her lips, and basks beneath her eyes,
Proud, that to him, so good a place is given,
He half forgets he ever fell from Heaven

THE SOLITAIRE—No. II.

" Talkativeness is usually called a feminine " vice but it is possible to go into masculine " company, where it will be as hard to wedge in " a word as at a female gossipping." TATLER

There is nothing in which people err so egregiously, as in the manner of carrying on conversation. In our travels through life, it is our own misfortune to meet with characters who shut us up with their incessant volubility of speech. Without considering whether their conversation pleases or offends, they continue their noisy chattering until want of breath, or the departure of the company compels them to stop.—Such persons deserve our utmost contempt, and should be banished from the " cheerful friendly circle" Conversation is a " joint property," and belongs as much to one member of the company as to the other, and it is not only an insult but a robbery to engross the whole of it. " Talk not to please yourself but others," was a maxim of the celebrated Tillotson; if this rule was observed in all conversations it might make men consider, whether what they speak be worth hearing; whether there be either wit or sense in what they are about to say, and whether it be adapted to the time when, the place where, and the person to whom it is spoken.—Let the subject be something of necessity and use; something that may advance the practice and love of virtue, reform the passions, or instruct the understanding; such as may administer advice to men in difficulties, assist them in the search of truth, give them a reverend sense of God, and an awful sense of his divine excellencies.—Such conversations would be of lasting benefit to us, and would leave no reflections of an unpleasant nature on our minds. Here let us pause—convinced that such has felt the evil and is favourable to a reform. G.

FANATICISM.—Fanaticism proves nothing against religion.—It is one of its diseases; and implies no more that there is no such thing as religion, than madness that there is no reason, or distemper that there is no health.

SKETCHES—No. IV.

CHILDHOOD.

" O —dream of by past hours,
In retrospect once more." TAPPAN.

There is generally a pleasing sensation attending a retrospection of the innocent sports and convivialities of our youth. To reflect upon a season when the sunshine of spring illumined our paths—when felicity seemed free from the alloy of heavy cares and the baneful sensualities of life, a natural glow of feeling warms and expands the heart. The reflection, it is true, may sometimes be embittered by a recurrence to the frivolities and misfortunes of " days long past"—but early cares are seldom so serious and indelible as those of a more mature age; and if they are more frequent, they only tend to sweeten the joys and pleasing prospects that alternately play around them. They are like the evanescent summer-cloud, which obscures the canopy of heaven for a transient moment, and retires to give way to the more refulgent beams of meridian Sol.

The pleasures of childhood are blended with the charms of maternity. The kind affection of a mother, like a sacred vigil, watches over the innocent follies of the offspring, and fans the holy calm of its slumbers. Her love, warm as it is natural, claims her every effort—her liveliest endeavours, to protect the little innocent from all intruding harm. Its happiness is the thermometer and temperament of her's. And should the gloom of sickness or misfortune damp its playful ardour in the pursuit of sport, the sympathetic tear which glitters in the mother's eye proclaims at once the inseperable affection which cements the maternal heart with the welfare of the child.

In contemplating the domestic harmony which generally prevails in the scenes of childhood, we are spontaneously captivated by the soothing tenderness of the mother She watches with studious care, the gentle throbs of the slumbering infant, weeping as it weeps,—smiling as it smiles,—while her own lassitude is forgotten in the consolation of observing the softened tranquinity of the object of her attention and her love.

How delightful is the retrospect when such images as these recur to the mind!—images not less true than pleasing:—when the happy past, with all its charms—all its flowery attractions, is brought on the wings of memory to unite with the musings of the present, and the moral perspective of the future! How pleasing it is

" To muse on days in childhood dear,
And hold communion with our fonder times."

Oh, how ineffable do the amiable virtues of a mother appear in such a reflection! But there are many, alas! very many, who now know these virtue- only as they are imprinted on the " tablet of the memory." Many, who have felt the influence of the maternal smile—the melting tear—and that sacred affection of a mother, which so greatly aggrandizes the female character,—only in the vernal seasons of youth and infancy. To the orphan—the motherless, the thoughts of early childhood are doubly dear. The faintest occurrences of earlier times are re- avoured to be recalled to the mind by a tangible perception. O, who can portray the feelings which such a remembrance awakens! Who but one that has lost a mother can tell how dear her early blessings are in the record of memory? That being, once so lovely—once so heavenly in her tenderness, sleeps in the mystic silence of the lonely grave—and he who was in early years nourished by the side of life in her fond embraces, contemplates the hallowed mound with that feeling which youthful recollections quicken with the strongest impulse—He transcient ly glances on the words—" HERE LIES"—while his eyes involuntarily raise themselves to heaven as if to belie the sacred inscription. His heart emphatically tells him—her mansion is in the skies

The grave of a parent—the slumbering object in the mother's arms—the scenes where our mute youth so merrily sported,—all impress the mind—all lead us in reflection over the path which can never be retraced, to the blissful days of early CHILDHOOD. PASQUIN.

Guilt triumphant over Innocence,

OR THE

STORY OF I. N. A SOMERTON.

[Concluded.]

It was not through a mistaken principle of honour that Theodore Somerton accepted the challenge from Beldair, much less that he was anxious to display that personal courage which never had ever dared to question with impunity; to the meekness of a christian, he united the unbending fortitude of a christian saint, and was as unwilling to give provocation as he was always ready to chastise the wilful depravity of others. In the lodge of revenge was ever honourable, in Theodore's case it were an offering to virtue to pursue it: that the being who had received from his hands a second loan of existence, that he, who, had his whole life been devoted in acts of gratitude, would have been only a right he was rendering Theodore, should be the first to paint the arrow of misfortune and hurl it on its fullest malignity against the most vulnerable point, was a reflection that completely divested Theodore of the philosophy of patience, and inclined his heart to nothing but an ardent thirst of revenge. The unsatisfactory explanation he had received from Beldair made him fear the worst, and added almost madness to rage. Inspired by these sentiments and in the hurry of resentment he fought with Beldair—Swords were their weapons, but not even the justice of his cause, nor the strength and resolution of his arm could prevail against the determined art and courage of Beldair, who quickly reduced him to the situation in which we last left him.

The news of the duel quickly spread abroad, and Emma was among the first to hear of it: its result was so sooner known to her than in an agony of despair and grief she hastened to her wounded brother, of whom she received intelligence almost as soon as the news of the meeting had reached her. Her interview with Theodore was such as we shall not attempt to describe—Suffice it to say that after six had been with him but a short time, in which he breathed not even a reproach, but cautioned her against the arts of Beldair, and to avoid him as her worst enemy, he not without severe struggles of pain, yielded up his existence, in a cause wherein virtue might have gloried in success Emma became almost frantic, but her trials were not destined yet to end, she was called on her murdered brother—importuned Beldair to save her, and exclaimed against herself as the wretched author of all this load of calamity She could make no reply to the words of her deceased brother that referred to her nominal husband—Their effect was like an electric shock, and she doubted her own sanity in listening to sounds that conveyed such a horrid meaning. Her violent emotion soon overpowered her, and she was borne off insensible to her lodgings, where new scenes of misery awaited her. Theodore's remains were soon after conveyed to the grave. At his previous request, a letter was despatched to Somerton, announcing the elder Somerton of the melancholy events in which he was so peculiarly concerned.

The enquiries of Emma for her husband when she became somewhat composed were answered by her female attendant in a prevaricating manner that almost confirmed her worst suspicions—but a letter received that day from Somerton, opened her of even the shadow of hope, and at once unfolded to her already crazed imagination all the horrors of her situation; it was brief, and misery was in every line. " I am," it went on, " at this time far removed from the scene of thy misfortunes, and assure thee all attempts to discover the place of my destination will be useless. By one word forgotten, a I shall study to forget thee—it is impossible we should again meet, after what has recently happened, and even otherwise, the claims that you may fancy you have to my protection are too weak for you to put any confidence in, and I warn you of their fallacy. I have loved you, and would ask your forgiveness, but that I have so little claim to your forgiveness as your love, and cannot expect either. I leave the task of an explanation to your attendant, who will inform you of every thing, and furnish you with the means necessary for your present comfort May your happiness be equal to the wishes of the once favourite Beldair."

From this mutual stab no art could be efficient to cure her, and Emma was completely all that was miserable She was no sooner assured of the dreadful truth from the lips of her attendant, than she became stupified, and so overcome by misfortune that a happy insanity seemed to have taken possession of all her faculties; she appeared the very effigy of hope—the form of life without the soul—the picture pencilled in darkness and in shade

But the unfeelingness of those around her soon recalled her to herself—the finger of scorn was pointed at her—males and females of the first high-minded pride rejected her as the outcast of virtue, not the victim of misfortune—envy gloried in the wreck of loveliness, and the unfeeling world affected to pity where it could not sympathize, and owned only charity where benevolence would have been virtue: her story soon was known, but such is the depravity of mankind, such the effrontery of what is falsely called manhood, that this only subjected her to insults we shall not shame human nature by naming.

Emma, careless of life, only sought consolation in the hopes of speedy dissolution: the world had lost its charms and all her hopes of happiness, her wishes of enjoyment, were changed to the blackness of despair If there was any one desire she cherished more than another it was that of seeing her revered sire, whose forgiveness would be a balm to her wounded spirit, and make her more fit to die in confidence with herself It would be impossible to paint her feelings respecting the guilty author of all her misfortunes—so completely had he taken his steps that no one knew whither he had gone, nor had she the most distant idea of his destination, which she thought would be as impossible to find as to reclaim him from the errors that marked his hardened career—heart-sick and groaning under sensations of the keenest anguish, she reached her native village, which she now viewed as the end of all her wanderings, and felt the presentiment of death in every step she took, that conducted her to her once happy home. It was a dismal evening in December, the clouds were rolling rapidly along the sky, and the day seceded in tears—the wind was evering in fury against the leafless trees, and wishing their stripped branches to and fro as if in the agonies of convulsions; the beauty of nature seemed departed, and ruin and gloom appeared in every thing that met the eye; but every object had little influence on the heart of Emma: lost in the misery of her own reflections, she only felt the present time—that the desolation that surrounded her, but unlike the partial forbearance of the smile of nature, the melancholy and despondence of her heart would in vain again be animated with the vernal spring of hope or enjoyment. She met with fearful recognitions on the village from those who had known her in happier days, but she only felt a retrospect to all one only object engrossed her imagination, which though it wandered not beyond the pale of her sorrows, constantly clung with fear and fondness on the prospect of her speedily finding forgiveness. At length she was welcomed by the embrace of a favoured domestic, and after asking for the appearance of her sire, she had nearly sunk into a state of insensibility from the violence of emotions she could not control She was quickly embraced in the arms of her aged " Welcome, oh, most welcome," he cried, " thou dear one, to the arms of all-clasping love, and will help thee once more to that peace of mind thou hast lost. Thy noble brother has suffered unjustly, but it shall be well with thee—thy destroyer—but I will not curse nor will leave him to the retributive justice of that God he has offended, and to the inward pangs of conscience, whose reproaches will be a punishment from which he can have no escape." Here controuled by overly repressing her fears for her long lost family know of her supposed absence and Beldair's timely explanation of which he said would have saved him countless hours of uneasiness. This was another wound to the heart of Emma, who now immediately perceived the folly of her precipitation as to Beldair, and the cruelty of her neglect of her parent in his forgiveness, and was not long in imputing it to its right source the artful designs of her destroyer—this was soon made known to Somerton, " He was determined on my destruction," said he, " and had not Clarke by his prey, been entangled in the net of his villainy, but oh, thou art weak and unblemished when compared with the wounds that conscience and repentance will inflict on the head of thy betrayer."

But who portract a narrative to trace the springs of causes the operate, alas! too certainly to effect It was but a short time and Emma fell a victim to that despondency of soul that had long fixed on the throb of existence—gentle was the struggle of anguish, ere it was wafted from her, on the wings of hope and fled to the regions of eternal day, where even the remembrance of

...ness that all emotion, and the tokens of joy ...appear all its function once more into perfection ... every after, bowed his head to the same ... had long been gently stealing over him, ... severe duty hastened the approach of death.— ... lies interred in the same grave with Emma— ... the same that tells their virtues, is the momento ... also of their misfortunes, and the passenger who ... has heard their story sighs over their ashes, and as he deplores their fate, breathes forth a prayer of gratitude that, however sinful, he is not a Belcastle.

Their story was often repeated—it even reached his ears, he who thought himself secure from ever hearing an incident breathed that should remind him of his—but the reproaches of the world were smothered in the thoughtlessness of dissipation, in the masses of which Beldair still continued a determined votary—its insults he revenged, its indifference he treated with scorn; and like the fallen angel, glorious even in sin, he bore himself as the unshrinking enemy of virtue, and the tower of strength that bade defiance to every mortal effort that might remind him that, however hardened, vice is not impregnable, and that the time will come when he shall shrink from the tortures of conscience, and that the blanched cheek of despair and the inward darting pang of remorse shall fill his mind with agonies, for which the enjoyments of a thousand worlds could never compensate.

"A Rat—A Rat."—SHAKS.

Messrs. Editors—

I have seldom seen more illiberal and disingenuous attacks than those signed "Ariel." I have ever believe them to be as harmless as they are bold. To receive the ridicule of some persons is an excellent criterion of merit, and if I were to aspire to literary fame, I should send this modest little portion of his wholesale beverage, to get from the whose me, so far to bestow an unjustly caste favour on those he so lavishly compliments —according to an old maxim, "some friends, like dogs, dirty those they love, most."

But Ariel pretends to criticism, Come forward then, thou school boy, and give us something more than declamatory fustian—any quibbler can rail; and while in that puling exordia to deprecate virtuous principle, the author de cutres ou pire. He militates not only common sense, but even common decency, contra bonos mores.

Our critic is evidently a votary at the shrine of Bacchus; and if Penguin wishes to please his eyes, he must write some good, sound eulogium on the bottle—perhaps a mellow entertainment at a beer-house would purchase his favour.

I do hope, Messrs. Editors, not one of the writers he has so hastily abused, will condescend to notice him. His own works seal his condemnation; and those bard who have received the approbation of men of taste can smile indignantly on such a carper.

COMMUNICATION.

TIVOLI THEATRE.

We are pleased in announcing to the public the second appearance, on Monday evening next, of the young gentleman, whose performance in the character of Hollo, at the same street Theatre, some time ago, became the subject of a newspaper discussion, and his intention of again becoming a candidate for histrionic honours, having selected for the occasion, the celebrated tragedy of Alexander the Great, the principal character in which he has sustained by him. The admirers of the drama, in the present instance, will have an opportunity of cherishing the infancy of exertion that only wants the timely aid of patronage to effect a happy maturity; and we are pleased to add that from the flattering specimen of his talents in the dramatic line, we may venture to predict, that there are few who, if divested of that fastidiousness often unalloyed to judgment, will not fail to be highly gratified in the laudable act of supporting and witnessing the dawning efforts of talents in the very arduous walks of a profession, whereto to improve our natural capacity and arrive at excellence, the fostering hand of encouragement is often only necessary.

COMMUNICATION.

TIVOLI THEATRE.

On Wednesday evening last, Mrs Baker, (formerly of the Walnut street Theatre) made her first appearance at the Tivoli Theatre, in the humorous interesting character of Cora, in Kotzebue's play of Pizarro, and frequently called forth our applause. She appeared to have studied well the part, and to have watched the manners of those actresses, who are allowed to be most successful in its representation, with marked attention, and where sensibility must be affected and interested, by mingling the bitter tones of dignity with the gentler notes of tenderness and love, she was very successful, for she was correct to us, by the means of producing stage effect, and played several of the scenes powerfully. Her conception of the character was excellent, her expression of the agitated feelings of the wife and mother was very good; her action was just though sometimes redundant—the only deficiency which the critic could notice, was a want of that energy in her voice. The applause of the spectators was no less justly than liberally bestowed.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—Observing in one of your late papers a question directed to Guessers, and being a Yankee, I have taken the liberty to guess it is the Ship's wake.

A GUESSER

At Marlborough, Windham County, state of Vermont, a number of ladies, representing the number of confederated States of the Union, celebrated the Anniversary of our National Independence, and a female orator delivered an address. We should think this almost equivalent to a declaration on the part of these ladies, that they are determined to live hereafter independent of mankind, or in other words, to die old maids.

Summary Divorce—A chance for Bachelors.—Mrs. Cornelia Jackson, after reciting in the Albany Gazette, the wrongs she had endured from her husband, Thomas Jackson, formerly of Montreal, concludes with the following manifesto: 'I do now, therefore, consider myself free from him as a wife!'

To the State prison first.—Whereas I, Silas Smith, have reported that Benjamin S. Birdsall and James Pinkney, on or about the first of November last, did, in the night time kill other people's sheep on the Great Plains, and that I caught them at it, which is a great slander upon the characters of the said Birdsall and Pinkney. Now, therefore, I, the said Silas Smith, do hereby acknowledge that I have asserted a falsehood, and confess myself to be a LIAR.

Groaning at Majesty.—A young man named Harrison, a sword cutler, was lately brought up in custody before the police court in Bow street, charged with groaning at his Majesty during his late attendance at Covent Garden Theatre. The fact being proved upon him, Mr. Minshul reprimanded the delinquent very sharply for his conduct, and ordered him to find bail; but his father came in the course of the morning, and succeeded in persuading the magistrate to let him go upon his (the father's) undertaking for his future good behaviour.—[London paper.

ROYAL SQUABBLES.

Faction has found or pretended to find, a new theme for malignant outcry. The London Morning Chronicle says, "We understand that his Majesty notified to the Duke of Devonshire (the Manager of the Fete at the Opera House, for the relief of the Irish,) that a box must be set apart for the Royal Family, and that he, the Duke of Devonshire, must inform the Duke and Dutchess of Gloucester, the Princess Sophia of Gloucester, and the Duke of Sussex, that there was no place for them in it. This notification, which was calculated to wound deeply the feelings of the Royal personages in question, prevented them of course, from being present at the Fete.

"It would seem that the species of persecution which was put in practice against the late Queen, and the Duke of Sussex, was only the commencement of a system which is to be permanently adhered to. The Duke de Grammont was commanded last year not to invite the Duke of Sussex to his ball. So then exclusion is now to be the order of the day. The whole weight of Court influence is to be directed against all those in high life, who may be so unfortunate as to incur at any time the Royal displeasure."

There is at present a clergyman residing in Lincolnshire, whose servant was lately executed for robbing him, attended with circumstances of a very aggravated nature. The man was born in the clergyman's house, christened by him, married by him, hung for robbing him, and conveyed to the village and buried by him.—London Paper.

A great deal of confusion is now occasioned which will hereafter be increased, by the uncertainty attached to the term American, when speaking of either the inhabitants or vessels of the United States, and the different nations of Spanish and Portuguese America. The people whose independence we have recognized, are not all inhabitants of South America, and yet they are all Americans as well as ourselves. It would perhaps be well to call the people of the United States North Americans (though the inhabitants of Canada and Nova Scotia are equally entitled to that appellation) and their standard the North American Flag. The Mexican Empire has a flag exclusively its own. The various nations of South America, the Venezuelan, the Buenos Ayrean, the Chilian, the Peruvian, and the Brazilian, will all be distinguished by their respective colours, and have each a distinctive name. The people of the United States alone of all America have no peculiar title except that of Yankee. Some arrangement ought to be made by which each nation may be distinguished from the rest.—Bost. Ev. Gaz.

The Spanish government appropriated, in 1820, upwards of nine millions of dollars for the expenses of the navy department for the two political years ending this month; but the actual receipts for the purpose do not amount to half the appropriation. The arrears due to the naval officers, artificers and day labourers, are upwards of 1,200,000 dollars. Many of them have received no pay for six, eight, ten and fourteen months. The construction of two or three frigates is suspended in the ports of Spain for want of materials and funds.—While such is the condition of the Spanish navy, the army receives regular pay. The reason for this preference of the army is the political situation of Spain. The army restored the present comparatively free constitution of that country, and is justly considered to be its firmest support.

A company of English emigrants, consisting of about thirty souls, arrived here last week from Quebec, on their way to join the English colony, planted by Mr. Birkbeck, in Illinois. They have with them young cattle, hogs, geese, &c. which they brought with them from England.—The whole company is in good health and high spirits. These people came out as emigrants to the Canadas, and landing at Quebec have helped to swell out the list of 'emigrants to the provinces,' that have been published from time to time in that city. Hundreds find their way across Lake Ontario to the United States, every year, in the same manner, while honest John Bull supposes them snugly quartered in his American dominions.

From the Baltimore Patriot of Thursday evening.

A ship from the Charleston Mercury office, dated July 18, noon, states, on the authority of capt. Davis, of the sloop Liberty, arrived there in 9 days from Turk's Island, that two vessels belonging to that place had lately been stolen by the blacks, and 150 of them made their escape to Port-au-Prince. The head of the gang was a confidential servant of a gentleman on the island, who had been employed as a captain of a vessel trading occasionally between Turk's Island and Port-au-Prince. Measures were taken by the owners of the slaves to demand them from the authorities of Hayti.

Cold-Blooded Murder.—James Craig, a shop-keeper of Mobile, was deliberately murdered, as he was asleep on three chairs, before his door in that town, on the night of the 18th ult. He had taken this place on account of the heat of the evening; and was found dead in the morning, from a stab in his right side. No attempt was made to rob his pockets or the shop. Gilbert Jones, formerly a carpenter, and late a boatman, is committed as the assassin. Jones had tried to pass a counterfeit fifty dollar bill on Craig, and on his refusal to take it, was heard to say he would "bleed him," (Craig) before he himself slept.—Balt. Paper.

Bookselling.—An idea of the immense circulation of books in England, may be formed from the fact, that the sales of one house in London amount to 5,000,000 of books in the year, and that sixty clerks are employed. Constant employment is also given by the same house to no less than 250 book-binders. What a mass of knowledge and amusement is thus distributed yearly to the world. There was a time when a literary seeman read each work as it appeared—at the present day we have hardly time to read more than the title, or at furthest, a review of the majority of them, when our attention is turned to new productions of genius or stupidity—as the case may be.—Georgian.

Extract of a letter dated Vera Cruz, June 18, 1822.

"The castle is still in the hands of the Royalists, and the city of Vera Cruz, in possession of the Independents. Each are fearful of the other. The castle has been recruited with five hundred men from Havana within a few days, which gives new vigour to the desponding party of the old governor. Young Victoria commands the town, it might easily be taken. The city is very sickly. Many Americans have died with the yellow fever. I go to Mexico to-morrow."

SURGICAL OPERATIONS.—As mankind are continually subject to accidents which require surgical aid, we are happy to report the singular success of an operation performed by Dr. Joshua Lee, of this town, on Mr. David Greely, of Reading, Steuben county, for a rupture, called by Medical gentlemen a scrotal hernia. After the reduction of the protruded parts was deemed impracticable a retrograde motion of the intestines, incessant vomiting, hiccough, and all the prominent symptoms of approaching dissolution having taken place, preparations were made accordingly; and on making the incision through the integuments, the strangulated portion of the intestines of five or six inches in length, together with a considerable portion of the omentum were found perfectly sphacelated, and were removed. The tumour had compressed the separate vessels so as to completely disorganize those parts to which they belong, all were also removed. The upper portion of the divided intestine was then confined to the skin through which the fæces pass—six weeks have now elapsed—the wound has almost healed, and the patient is fast recovering.

From the Missouri (now Geo) Missionary.

Such a phenomenon as has taken place, and is still progressing in the county of Jefferson, near the Warren line, on a hill near the Ogechee river, is not common in this part of the world.

About six or eight weeks ago, the earth on a steep hill side was discovered to be sinking and dividing asunder to the extent of about one acre. A gentleman in the neighbourhood of this scene, told me that he went round it and on it about three weeks ago, and very distinctly heard the cracking and snapping of the roots. A man of the same neighbourhood who was my pilot to this eventful place, on the 23th June, 1822, told me that it was progressing fast. When I was favoured with a view of it, I think it had extended over about two acres. On the most elevated part of the hill, the earth has sunk about twelve feet perpendicular, while on the lower side it has risen six or eight feet above the surface. Over about one acre, the timber has been prostrated on the hill, forming a ruinous appearance from its having been thrown in every direction. On the other part some of the trees are fallen; while the remnant are tilted in different directions, with a number of cracks of different sizes and running various courses. There is a large crack extending itself along the side of the hill indicating thereby, the further progress of this strange eruption. Previous to this event there was a good spring of water flowing from the troubled part of the earth; the water still issues from the ruin, resembling in color the earth which is discovered in those cracks.

ELISHA HURT.

Boston, July 20.—A prisoner confined in the County Jail, in this city, named Elijah Bruce, committed suicide last night, between the hours of 10 and 11 o'clock, by cutting his throat with a razor. He had been committed for want of bail on a peace warrant, issued upon a complaint, made by his wife, for an assault. He was formerly a butcher; and though there were two other prisoners confined in the same room, he had effectually succeeded in despatching himself before they could interfere to prevent the fatal catastrophe.

A quarry of Stone has been discovered in Virginia, from which mill stones have been made, said to be equal to the French Burr Stones, which are procured from Europe at so much cost.

Kidnapping.—George Wilson, a coloured man in Delaware, advertises that his son, named James, about 17 years of age, and who was born free, has been kidnapped and carried out of the state.

Accident.—One man and three women were drowned on the 3d inst. in attempting to cross the Little Miami, (Cincinnati) in a waggon. A woman saved herself by clinging to the waggon till assistance arrived.

A boat belonging to the British brig Mary, which arrived on Saturday last at Baltimore, from Liverpool, capsized on that night, with 10 or 12 persons in it, two of them were drowned.

Among the celebrators of the 4th of July at Lebanon, in Connecticut, was Colonel JONAS CLARK, in his 93d year, and who commanded a company under the heroic Putnam on Breed's Hill, in 1775. He wore the hat which William Williams wore, in 1776, when he signed the declaration of Independence.

It may be mentioned as a thing perhaps unexampled, that the late lieut. Perry was presented by congress with a sword at the age of 19 years. He bore this honorable testimony of his country's gratitude, for his gallant conduct at the battle of Erie. He was in the boat with his brother, the commodore, when she passed from the Lawrence to the Niagara.—Salem Reg.

The Emperor Iturbide was crowned at Mexico, on the 25th June.

The Columbian government has appointed J. Rafeal Ravenga, their political agent to reside at London; he has already passed to Europe, via Jamaica. Mr. Ravenga is a young man of considerable qualifications—the late lamented Manuel Torres was his Mentor.

It is expected that general Carlos Soublette, at present at the head of the departmental administration of Carracas, will succeed the late Manuel Torres, as minister of the Colombian republic to the government of the United States.

Gen. Clementi will probably be transferred to Carracas.

The st te of the Spanish garrison in Porto Cabello is very desperate—the town, which the generosity of Bolivar had spared, has been sacrificed by a heavy bombardment, in consequence of the desolating and depredatory system carried on by the troops that landed at and harrassed the country about Coro. The besieged have destroyed the bridge which united the town with the fortifications—not a house remains standing.

FROM THE DELAWARE GAZETTE.

An article is going the rounds of the papers stating that Mr. Warner, our consul at Havanna, is dead. It is proper to state that so far from this being the case, he is now in this borough and in perfect health. The person who died in that city, whose death has probably given rise to the report, is Mr. Ralls, who was left by Mr. Warner to act in his absence.

An European traveller mentions, that of all modern heroes, the Duke of Wellington is the most popular in China; this, it is said, results not from the victories obtained by that nobleman, for about the battle of Waterloo, the Chinese know but little and care still less. It is the name of the noble Duke, that possesses such a charm to the ears of his admirers—it sounds and it is pronounced very much like a word of Chinese origin—Wee-ling-ton. As the name of this hero thus pronounced, contains three distinct Chinese words, he is in their estimation, one of the greatest men that ever lived—perhaps descended in a direct line from the five clawed dragon, who it seems is the guardian saint of the Celestial empire.

Courtship from the Psalms.—A young lady in the west of England, named Miss Grace Lord, by her uncommon beauty and accomplishments, had become the object of attention to numerous suitors. The young lady constantly referred them to her father, who, being of a whimsical temper, as well as much attached to the society of his daughter, for a long time gave no one a favourable reception. At length, a young man who had remarked that the father was a great humourist, after experiencing a refusal, addressed him in writing, in the following words, from the version of the 67th Psalm,

Have mercy on me Lord.
And grant to me the Grace.

The expedient succeeded, and he obtained the young lady with the paternal consent.

FROM A LATE BRITISH PUBLICATION.

Washington's Ancestors.—In the complicated and marvellous machinery of circumstances, it is absolutely impossible to decide what would have happened, as to some events, if the slightest disturbance had taken place, in the march of those that preceded them. We may observe a little dirty wheel of brass, spinning round upon its greasy axle, and the result is that in another apartment, many yards distance from it, a beautiful piece of silk issues from a loom, rivalling in its hues the tints of the rainbow; there are myriads of events in our lives the distance between which was much greater than that between this wheel and the ribbon, but where the connection had been more close. If a private country gentleman in Cheshire, about the year seventeen hundred and thirty, had not been overturned in his carriage, it is extremely probable that America, instead of being a free republic at this moment, would have continued a dependant colony of England. This country gentleman happened to be Augustus Washington, Esq. who was thus accidentally thrown into the company of a lady who afterwards became his wife, who emigrated with him to America, and in the year 1732, at Virginia, became the envied mother of George Washington the great.

The Evening Post.

PHILADELPHIA.

Saturday, July 27, 1822.

The present Number, 52, completes the first year of the publication of the SATURDAY EVENING POST—we again offer our acknowledgments to those friends who determined us to prosecute the seemingly adventurous undertaking, and it may be gratifying for them to know, that our most sanguine expectations are fully matured by the liberal patronage we have received. The list of our subscribers, at present, is rising ONE THOUSAND. We shall continue the paper without any material alterations in its manner or form—we state this as it has been intimated that our intention was to issue it semi-weekly.

We invite those who are in arrears for the whole year, to a speedy settlement, as, unless their dues are settled, the paper cannot be received by them, while our claims will be scrupulously and indiscriminately exacted.

A writer appeared some time since in the New-York Statesman, under the signature of Ariel, implicating one of the American commission at the treaty of Ghent, with having advised a mercantile house in London, of the progress which was making towards the conclusion of pacific arrangements between our government and Great Britain, and thereby affording them every opportunity of entering into commercial speculations. It was also insinuated that the natives were not entirely disinterested which led to this violation of the pledge of office. Mr. Jonathan Russell, who was one of that mission, wrote in reply to Ariel, and desired the name of the author. In consequence of this, Seth Hunt, Esq. of Lenington, (Vt.) in a candid and public manner, acknowledges as his own the queries alluded to, but disavows all malignity in their propagation. Mr. H. declines giving any clue to his informant, though he says what he has stated can be substantiated by respectable references, if necessary. Mr. Russell has directed a suit for a libel to be instituted, and we hope, for the honour of our diplomacy, this affair may be divested of its suspicious inferences.

A number of idle reports having been circulated throughout New-York, with regard to the health of its inhabitants, it was thought necessary by several respectable citizens, to wait upon the Board of Health, as they had made no report, and ascertain to a certainty the truth or falsity of the rumours. This having been done, we are happy to say that all cause for alarm at present, from any infectious disease which it may have been said was spreading there, is entirely groundless, and we hope it may long continue so. The cases which had occurred were principally Bilious and not the Yellow Fever.

FROM THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

AMERICAN POETRY.

Mess. Editors

It cannot be denied that American Poetry has at length attained a rank in the scale of science to which it is fairly entitled. The mists of prejudice which have so long enveloped the Columbian Muse, are rolling rapidly away, and even Americans are willing to allow to the successful candidates for favour among them, the meed which British candour had previously awarded. No one can rejoice with greater sincerity than my-self on this occasion. American valour has achieved its own deliverance and glory; American science can alone sustain its dignity in the rank of nations. But I rejoice with trembling. Many circumstances may conspire to dim the halo which inspiration has shed around us.—It is of importance that the impression imbibed abroad, relative to our literary taste and discrimination, should be favourable to our just pride as an intelligent nation. From our JOURNALS, as well as books, this idea is derived; and I cannot without deep regret declare, that the specimens of no-scalled poetical talent, displayed in the columns of the generality of our newspapers, is calculated to inflict disgrace upon our national literary character, and what is more to be lamented, there is no ray of hope to flatter us with the probability that this evil will ever be remedied.

The United States' sloop of war Hornet, Capt. Read, arrived at Havanna the 10th inst. from a short cruise off the Matanzas. On the 9th she fell in with a French brig from Africa, with 160 slaves on board; which had been captured on the 6th, by the Columbian cruiser General Paez. Capt. Read took possession of the prize, and carried her into Havanna.

SPAIN.—Gibraltar papers received at Boston to the 28th of May, state that the Cortez will prolong their session a month. Nothing was done relative to the acknowledgement of South American Independence. Spain was comparatively tranquil. A few bands of robbers and contrabandistas still occupied the mountains.

The Buffalo Patriot states that all the islands in the Niagara River, except Navy Island, have by the decision of the commissioners under the Sixth Article of the Treaty of Ghent, fallen to the United States; and also, that Drummond's Island, in Lake Huron, on which is a British garrison, has also fallen within our limits.

Terrible Whirlwind.—On Monday the 8th inst. says the Hudson Centinel, the most violent and terrible whirlwind, perhaps ever witnessed in this part of the country, commenced about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, in the eastern part of the town of Austerlitz, in the county of Columbia, and about one mile from the eastern boundary of this state. At its commencement it was about fifteen rods wide, its progress was eastward and continued its destructive violence for the distance of twenty miles, prostrating all that it encountered in its course, several barns were raised from their foundations and scattered to atoms; fortunately not a single individual has sustained any personal injury.

We learn that the Big Warrior, with the advice of his council has forbidden the Missionaries in the nation to preach; but allows them to keep school for the instruction of his youthful subjects in the various branches of youthful learning. Like some of his brother monarchs in Europe, he seems fearful of disturbing the established order of things.—Alabamian.

A new mineral has been discovered at the Franklin iron works, near Sparta, in New Jersey, by Professor W. Keating, which has received the name of Jeffersonite.

Praiseworthy.—It is stated in the Boston papers that the Manufacturing Company at that place have appropriated $600 to the purchase of books, for the instruction of the children at the Waltham establishment.

Iron Ore.—This valuable article is stated to have been discovered in great abundance near Angelica, in Alleghany county, and the iron manufactured from it is said to be of the first quality.

Description.—The following display of descriptive talent is from a southern paper, it is that of a run-away. "He is about 5 feet 4 or 5 inches high, an acknowledged liar, a proven villain, a sandy-haired, red-faced, blue-eyed, long-nosed, stoop-shouldered, gallows-looking, pretendingly-learned, stultified, woman-hated, blue-coated, black-vested, grey-pantalooned, dandy-dressed, deceiver—one of those pestiferous insects that often make their flight into the western country, destroying as they go the herbage of honesty, and poisoning the foilage of the innocent and unsuspecting, and then take their flight."

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

There is now exhibiting on a sheet of water, in London, a new method of propelling vessels of every description, which entirely supercedes the use of the paddle-wheels used in the present construction of steam vessels, and renders them as free from external incumbrance as the most convenient sailing packet.

Charleston, July 18

The Court of Magistrates and Freeholders convened for the trial of sundry persons of colour, charged with an attempt to raise an Insurrection in this State have unanimously found the following Guilty, and passed upon them the sentence of Death, to be carried into execution on Friday morning, the 26th instant, on the Lines, between six and nine o'clock:

Julius, Tom, Joe Mingo, Smart, Paris, Polydore, Robert, John, Adam, Ned Lewis, Jack, Sandy, Jack, Pharo, all slaves, belonging to different masters. The Court still continues assiduously engaged in the trial of others apprehended for the above crime.

To MATHEMATICIANS.—Suppose A. builds a house two stories high, and B. who becomes the purchaser of it desires to increase the size of his house by one more story—he therefore digs to the depth of the story, and runs his wall up to the former foundation. Now the question is, whether the house be a story higher or a story lower. B.

DRAMATIC SUMMARY.

TIVOLI GARDEN.—Mrs. Baker makes her second appearance this evening, in the character of Elvina, in the drama of the Bird Boy, which, with the melo drama called the Warlock of the Glen, comprize the entertainments for the night. In regard to the melo drama of Zoolida.

WASHINGTON CITY.—The new pathetic melodrama of Therese, translated from the French by John Howard Payne, was performed for the first time on Thursday evening last.

NEW YORK.—On Monday evening, at the City Theatre, Mrs. Entwisle appeared in the character of the Widow Cheerly, in the comedy of the Soldier's Daughter, for her benefit and last appearance this season, among other engagements to the corps dramat que, the names of Messrs. Adamson & A. Simpson, of the Philadelphia st ge.

At the Rural Theatre Chatham st. Mr Tatin the celebrated ballet master, is engaged for a few nights. Master George F Smith, appeared on Thursday eve, as Sylvester Daggerwood. Miss M Manus and Mrs Alley, also there.

At the Circus, the Forty Thieves is exhibiting with sundry fancy horses.

Mrs Holman is now at Albany, on her way to the south. She will probably soon regale the fashionable circles at the Springs with specimens of her musical talents.

The celebrated Mr. Godeau is also at Albany, entertaining the lovers of rational amusement," with his performances on the tight and slack rope.

BOSTON.—Miss Johnson has been successfully exhibiting her favorite walks in the drama, to the amusement of the citizens of the Literary Emporium in the new World. She personated Juliet to Mr. Dull's Romeo, at the Washington Gardens, on Monday last, and appeared again on Wednesday evening.

NEW ORLEANS.—Mr. James H. Caldwell, manager of the American Theatre at N. Orleans, has arrived at his residence, at Fredericksburg, Vir. He has just closed the theatrical campaign at the former place, where, it is understood, before he took his departure, he laid the corner stone of the first American theatre, ever designed to be devoted exclusively for the representation of the English drama, in that city, which is to contain 1700 persons. Mr. C during his northern tour, intends to procure, in our large cities, many of the interior embellishments, indispensable to the completion of his enterprize.—He purposes to open it with a strong company, and in a style of splendour corresponding with the spirit of that wealthy and rising metropolis.

FOREIGN.—Mr. Kean (says a late London paper) played Romeo lately at Drury Lane Theatre. "For the, first time these five years," and if he should not play it for five years more, the town will be no loser.

COMMUNICATED.

Departed this life in the afternoon of Wednesday, July 17th, in the 17th year of her age, MARY ANN MYERS whose friends and numerous acquaintances, and particularly those of the m whose sorrows she not unfrequently enjoyed, are respectfully presented with the following lines, showing at once, that evenness of mind and sweetness of disposition, which were manifested by her on every occasion until her death; which will not soon, it is hoped, be forgotten by any of her young friends, whom she did, notwithstanding her hopelessness and weakness, so affectionately address.

There's no continuing city here,
But we must seek a higher sphere;
And none so lovely as that God,
Who makes my joys arise.
He sends his holy spirit down,
To comfort and to bless;
And hears my prayers,
While those around,
Do join me in the song.
But, thanks to God,
My peace is made:
I bid this world adieu,
And thank my friends,
For their kind aid,
"Tis all that I can do.
And now I take my leave of thee,
Dear mother, sister, and the rest,
My brothers and my sisters too,
May you in Heaven be blest!
And O! prepare to meet me there,
In that heavenly place,
Where an illustrious Saviour reigns,
Amongst the saints of rest.
O! how I long to meet my God!
Whose mercies I implore.
That I may make my sweet abode,
On Zion's happy shore.
Thus Lord I give myself to thee,
'Tis all that I can do.
I leave my friends and this vain world,
A better to pursue
And those of you my dear young friends,
Whose com-pany I've enjoyed,
May you begin when I am gone,
To serve and fear the Lord. J. A.

THE OLIO.

"Variety's the very spice of life,
That gives it all its flavour."

Answers to the Enigmas in No. 50.

ANSWER TO THE FIRST.

The river in the mildest clime,
Its ruler's the PO;
The TAY in Scotia, land of song—
Part of the foot, a TOE:
These join'd, the fruit will spell,
Thro' Europe known and loved so well.

ANSWER TO THE SECOND.

The letters that will SURVIVO spell,
Add saw transposed—when done,
The name of Freedom's chief will tell—
The glorious WASHINGTON.

AN ANECDOTE—VERSIFIED.

A Pat, an old joker—and Yankee more sly,
Once riding together, a gallows pass'd by,
Said the Yankee to Pat, "If I don't make too free,
Give that gallows its due, and pray where would you be?"
"Why, honey," say Pat, "that's easily known;
I'd be riding to town by myself all alone."

A peri-wig maker in the town of Lewes, in England, made use of the biblical story of Absalom, to recommend the sale of false hair. He had a sign painted on the front of his shop, representing the rebellious son of David hanging in an oak by the hair of his head, with this whimsical couplet below:

Oh Absalom unhappy sprig,
Thou should'st have worn a periwig.

A hint to story repeaters.

Bishop Doddington was very lethargic.—Falling asleep one day after dinner with sir Richard Temple and Lord Cobham, the general, the latter reproached Doddington with his drowsiness; Doddington denied having been asleep; and to prove he had not, offered to repeat all Lord Cobham had been saying. Cobham challenged him to do so. Doddington repeated a story: and Lord Cobham owned he had been telling it. "Well," said Doddington, "and yet I did not hear a word of it; but I went to sleep because I knew that about this time of day you would tell that story."—Lord Orford's Memoirs.

A Cut.—Frederick of Prussia, great conqueror as he was, sustained a severe defeat at Coslin, in the war of 1756. Some time after, at a review, he jocosely asked a soldier, who had got a deep cut in his cheek—Friend, at what alehouse did you get that scratch? I got it, said the soldier, at Coslin, where your majesty paid the reckoning to the Russians.

A person brought before a magistrate on a charge of an assault and battery, candidly acknowledged that he had a hand in kicking the complainant down stairs.

It was a saying of Lord Halifax, that, "if ordinary beggars are whipped, the daily ones in fine clothes, out of a proportionable respect for their quality, ought to be hanged."

The Ladies' Friend.

A letter is published in the National Intelligencer from five Ladies viz. TABITHA TOBE, HULDA PEABODY, PATIENCE PERSONOR, EKORET DOOLITTLE, and LIVE IN MORE DAILY, complaining of the numerous recent decisions for breaches of the promise of marriage. The young men, they observe, now shun them like a pestilence, for fear of a constructive promise—their walks are alone by themselves. They express themselves very pertinently upon the disgraceful exhibition of cupidity in some late cases in New-England. In a postscript they ask if there are any apes in the District of Columbia, but if not, they say Dundies will do.

Daloho's elegant Apology to the Ladies.

MASONRY.—Agreeably to the tenets of our order, the fair sex are excluded from associating with us in our mystic profession; not because they are deemed unworthy of the secret, "nor because the mechanical tools of the craft are too ponderous for them to wield," but from a consciousness of our own weakness. Should they be permitted to enter the lodge, love would oftentimes enter with them, jealousy would probably rankle in the hearts of the brethren, and fraternal affection be perverted into rivalship. Although the most amiable and lovely part of nature's works are excluded from our meetings, yet our order protects them from the attacks of vicious and unprincipled men. It forbids us to sacrifice the ease and peace of females for a momentary gratification; and it forbids us to undermine and take away that transcendent happiness from those whose hearts are united by the bond of sincere affection. The feelings of women are more exquisitely fine, and their generous sympathy is more easily awakened, by the misfortunes of their fellow-creatures, than the stronger sex. The soft tear of pity bedews their cheeks at the tale of woe, and their gentle bosoms heave with tender emotion at the sight of human wretchedness. They require not the adventitious aid of mystic institutions to urge them to acts of charity and benevolence, nor the use of symbols to lead them to virtue. Their own hearts are the lodges in which virtue presides, and the dictates of her will is the only incentive to action.

The Maiden's Leap.—A daughter of the first Earl of Gowrie was courted by a young gentleman, much her inferior in rank and fortune. Her family, though they gave no encouragement to the match, permitted the young man at their castle of Ruthven, Perthshire; and on such occasions, they assigned him was in a tower, to which the young lady slept. On one of his visits, the young lady, before the doors were shut, got into her lover's apartment; but some one of the family having discovered it, told her mother, who, cutting off, as she thought, all possibility of retreat, hastened to surprize them; the young lady, however, hearing the well known steps of her mother hobbling up stairs, ran to the leads, and took a desperate leap of nine feet four inches, over a chasm of sixty feet from the ground, alighted on the battlements of the other tower, whence descending into her own chamber, she crept into bed. Her mother having in vain sought her in her lover's chamber, came into her room, where finding her seemingly asleep, she apologised for her unjust suspicion. The young lady eloped the following night, and was married. The chasm between the towers is still shown under the appellation of the Maiden's leap.

A writer in the American Farmer says, that to rub a bedstead infected with bed bugs, with the green tomato vine, will effectually expel that most troublesome insect.

MECHANICAL WONDER.

THE citizens of Philadelphia went in crowds to see the Mechanical Museum when it was established here, and more recently to the famous Andrades of Mr Haddock, and willingly paid for their admission; and hundreds travelled to Chesnut Hill and gave their dollar to see the ingenious contrivance of Rollo Dyer. ANDERSON'S Son of Automaton, that could play chess, and of the other which was made to articulate words? both so celebrated in Europe. And who would not give a half eagle to see them? but all these wonders are surpassed by a piece of Mechanism now in this city, which is far more curious, splendid and surprising than any that have been exhibited for money.

This wonderful specimen of art consists in a beautiful golden bird, wrought to the life, and covered with brilliant plumage richly imitated in enamel. The beholder first sees only a superb box of gold and pretty as stones, ornamented with exquisite enamel paintings; from this box the bird rises, and moving his head and wings in the most natural manner, he chirps his salutation and then pours out a song as rich in melody as that of the sweetest among the feathered choir, and after entertaining the auditor with this delightful music, vanishes suddenly from sight, leaving the spectator wrapt in pleasing astonishment. Is not this worth a dollar to see? The best of all is, it is shown freely without cost or charge, to all those whose good fortune leads them to purchase lottery tickets, halves or quarters, at

Gibbs' Lucky Office,

No. 42, South Third street, Philadelphia.

N. B. It is reported that this magnificent production was purchased at a large price by a subscription raised among a number of respectable mechanics, and presented by them to its present owner, in token of their acknowledgment of the great advantage they have found in purchasing their lottery tickets at his truly lucky office.
